

is your loved one safe at home?

It's not always easy to decide. Decline can happen so gradually that it often goes unnoticed until a crisis happens. Perhaps they have good days and bad days - and you're only seeing the good ones. To more accurately assess your family member's situation, ask yourself the following specific questions.

Is your family member at risk of falling?

Y N

Would they have difficulty calling 911 or other emergency services?

Y N

Are they confused by their medications, or do they have trouble remembering why each one is taken and the proper dosages?

Y N

Is your family member's personal hygiene declining?

Y N

Have they lost weight or experienced difficulty cooking and shopping for groceries?

Y N

Are newspaper, mail and bills piling up? Have any utilities been disconnected?

Y N

Does your family member drive too slowly, overlook traffic signals, or experience difficulty arranging transportation?

Y N

Are they at risk of falling victim to crime, letting strangers into their home, or trusting those they shouldn't?

Y N

Is your family member afraid of being alone? Do they call frequently?

Y N

Are they becoming more isolated, most often choosing to "just stay home"?
