Long-Lived Locomotive

In 1831, Philadelphia and New York were the two largest cities in America. The state of New Jersey, situated between the two cities, became a prime location for a railroad company that could transport people and goods up and down the coast. Robert Stevens founded the Camden & Amboy Railroad (C&A) and enlisted Robert Stephenson and Company of Newcastle, England, to build a steam engine, which was called the John Bull, which started service on September 15, 1831. In 1981, 150 years after its first operation, John Bull ran again in Washington, D.C., making it the oldest self-propelled vehicle in the world.

“The Catch”

On September 29, 1954, Willie Mays made one of baseball’s biggest plays on baseball’s biggest stage. It was Game 1 of the World Series between Mays’ New York Giants and the Cleveland Indians. The score was tied 2–2 in the top of the eighth inning when Cleveland batter Vic Wertz hit a line drive to deep center field. With the crack of the bat, Mays sprinted to the deepest part of center and made a spectacular over-the-shoulder catch on the warning track and still had the presence of mind to quickly throw the ball into the infield to keep the runners from advancing. New York went on to win a World Series title, and Mays’ catch has gone down in baseball history, remembered simply as “The Catch.”

Shetland’s Golden Fleece

The last Saturday in September brings Shetland Wool Week, a week that places Scotland’s textile industry in the spotlight. Shetland wool is a luxuriously soft, warm, and airy wool that is sheared from Shetland sheep, a breed that originally hailed from the Shetland Islands in the northernmost isles of Scotland. Fair Isle knitwear, sweaters that are world famous for their colorful patterns, warmth, comfort, and durability, come from the Shetland island named Fair Isle, where knitters have been turning Shetland wool into garments since the 1600s. Family-based knitters only produce up to 40 garments a year by hand.
