It is a misconception to assume that “religion” and “spirituality” are interchangeable aspects of human identity. The understanding of religious and spiritual identity within our culture is rapidly changing. Many people are feeling numb and/or disconnected. New and deeper understanding of spiritual identity can help us to be well educated about how these identities impact how we best provide care for patients and families.

THURSDAY, APRIL 22
8:30–9:30 AM CST

A ritual practice has a power to speak without words. The use of ritual can also create community solidarity and lessen the sense of isolation. Rituals serve as a bridge between the outer sense of self and the inner sense of identity or can transform something ordinary into something extraordinary. In this education we will explore how developing both personal and communal ritual practices can help us to remain grounded, increase a sense of belonging and well-being for caregivers, patients and families.
