Decorate Your Walls

Ever felt intimidated when it comes to putting a hole in the wall to hang that picture, not sure if you're putting it in the right place? Next time you need to hang something, use these tips to get what you are looking for.

Many art galleries use the 57 inches rule, which means the center of the artwork should be 57 inches from the ground, which is about eye level for most people.

If hanging a piece over a couch or bed, give yourself 8 to 10 inches from the top of the furniture to the bottom of the artwork.

If hanging multiple frames in a grid or gallery, space them out approximately 2 to 4 inches apart. Figure out which piece you want as your anchor/main art and display around that. Try cutting newspaper or butcher paper to each frame's size and taping it to the wall to determine the best layout.

A picture that sits on top of a piece of furniture and leans against the wall instead of hanging can have several advantages. You can layer artwork or frames to create interest and it can also be easier to make changes in the future.
