Visit Utah's Newest Park

Have you been to visit Utah's newest park yet? Allen Park, which is located in Salt Lake City on 1300 East across from Westminster College (Allen Park Dr., approximately 1850 South), opened as a public park in early October after being purchased by the city. The space was originally built by Dr. George Allen and Ruth Larsen Allen as a bird sanctuary in the 1930's and received the nickname 'Hobbitville' for the small houses and log cabins that were built on the property, according to KSL.com. Over the years the Hobbitville nickname perpetuated an urban legend that a community of little people lived there. The park was described by the Salt Lake Telegram in 1949 that "Entering through stone pillars one goes from the hustle and traffic of 13th East into a haven of trees, birds and quiet. ... As one rides down the winding driveway, he is intrigued by the large cement plaques set in flower beds and adorned with title figures and letters bearing famous quotations from Shakespeare and Omar Khayam."
