Answer to: "Who Am I?"

Edward Teller (1908-2003) was a Hungarian-born American theoretical physicist. He is considered one of the fathers of the hydrogen bomb. Later when Teller migrated to Germany, England and America, he saw the noose of Nazism tightening around Europe. This combined double blow, of the cruelties of Communism & Nazism, seems to have dictated almost every one of Teller's major decisions for the rest of his life. In 1954, Teller testified against J. Robert Oppenheimer at his security clearance hearing. He was a major proponent of investigating non-military uses for nuclear explosives. He also visited Israel often as their main advisor on nuclear matters. After the Soviet Union detonated its first atomic bomb in 1949, Teller worked to convince President Truman to develop a crash program for the hydrogen bomb, which he believed was feasible. In 1950, Truman approved the hydrogen bomb program & Teller returned to Los Alamos later that year to begin working on a design. Much of his work still remains classified to this day.
