WHEN IS IT TIME?

How do you know when your aging loved one needs help? And where to find it.

Aging. It's difficult to see – especially in those you love. If you think your loved one needs some help, here are some signs to look for:

- Weight loss. Missing meals could be a sign of depression, or dementia. However, more often than not, it might just be that shopping and preparing meals is too much for them to handle.
- Diagnosed with dehydration or malnutrition. This could be from forgetting to eat or drink, or because they are unable to shop or prepare meals.
- Frequent illness, hospitalizations, or EMS visits.
- Confusion. Bills unpaid, stove left on, unsure what day or time it is. Frequently loses items. Too confused to call for help?
- Medication errors. Taking the wrong dose, or forgetting medication, or taking expired medication.
- Poor hygiene. Doesn't shower or bathe, spends the day in pajamas.
- Refusing visits from family member in order to conceal deterioration.
- Someone who is normally outgoing becomes socially withdrawn.
- Concerns about driving: doesn't recall how they arrived at destination, automobile in disrepair, fender benders, or other accident damage on car.
- Neighbors report loved one wandering aimlessly in the neighborhood.
- Thermostat set at extreme temperatures.
- Cost of private in-home health/companion care they require is becoming too expensive.

If you have checked the box on any of these signs, it may be time to take a look at the assistance a senior living community could provide.
