Hearing Health Tips & New Technologies

If you're struggling to hear certain sounds or voices that you've always been able to hear just fine, you may be facing a common issue: age-related hearing loss (know as presbycusis). It affects one in three adults over 65, and fortunately, there are various ways to treat it.

The causes of presbycusis include changes in the inner ear, middle ear, or in nerve paths to the brain. Other contributors may include prolonged exposure to loud noises, loss of hair cells, genetic factors, health conditions like heart disease or diabetes, and some medications, per John Hopkins Medicine. It is not a reversible condition so prevention (by avoiding loud noise exposure or wearing ear plugs) is wise.

If you're wondering if you're experiencing hearing loss, but are not sure, there are symptoms to look out for. Presbycusis often occurs gradually and subtly over time. You may find it harder than usual to hear soft voices, children's voices, and speech during background noise, and you may miss words in conversation, according to the American Academy of Audiology. You may also experience ear ringing or hear mumbled or slurred speech. To find out if you are in fact experiencing hearing loss, you'll want to seek a diagnosis from your health provider. You may be referred to a hearing specialist who can test if there are tones you're unable to hear.

When it comes to treatment options for hearing loss, the options are plentiful.

 Hearing Aids are widely used and just recently became available over the counter. Their technology moves forward with recent improvements such as directional

- microphones that can help speech be understood over background noise.
- Cochlear implants can help by creating signals the brain interprets as sound.
- Telecoils can enhance hearing aids and cochlear implants.
- Assistive listening devices (a hearing loop system, FM system, or infrared system) help amplify sounds and can be used with or without hearing aids.
- Augmentative and alternative communication devices can help people express themselves via a picture board or text display.
- Alerting devices use sound, light, and vibrations to alert users of events.

Bird Watch: Chickadees and Titmouse

By Marjorie N.

A clear whistled "fee-bee" fills the back yard, yet its maker is one of our smallest birds. Shortly after, a sweet, triple note song is heard. The Black-capped Chickadee has found the bird feeder full and it's rapidly stuffing its beak before company arrives. (I use "it" because male and female look very much alike.) Chickadees and their relative, the Titmouse, form one of the largest bird families in the Northern Hemisphere. In most of northern Europe, they are known as "Tits" of one species or another. The family Paridae has 12 species in the US, compared to more than 18 in Europe.)

Acrobatic, with short, almost dance-like movements, this bird is fun to watch. Our area boasts 3 species of chickadee (4 if you count the Oak Titmouse) and one or the other and sometimes two different species can be found foraging together in backyards, rural areas, and the mountains (usually around picnic spots). The Oak Titmouse is gray, with a crest giving it the look of a miniature Steller's Jay. Black-capped Chickadees are the most common here, with their black "beanies" and throat bibs separated by white cheeks. Their white bellies seem almost glaring against their lighter gray wings. Difficult to differentiate from their cousin, the Mountain Chickadee sports a band of white across the front of its black beanie. They frequently visit Pioneer Village in winter when mountain life is challenging. As you drive toward the coast, you might see a bird that looks exactly like a chickadee, but has unmistakable reddish-brown wings. This, obviously, is the Chestnut Chickadee. Look for it in as "chicks."
